GIZMO is a man without an island. Baby boy's world has been turned upside down since he was brought to the shelter through no fault of his own. This Blue Russian beauty is great with other cats, dogs and older kids. Stan's not a tiny kitten anymore, and that's what makes him great! 7 Steps for a Healthier Home

(Family Features) As homeowners become increasingly aware of the impact their homes can have on the environment – and on their health – making eco-conscious choices is as important as ever. From controlling the types of materials used within your home to keeping an eye on indoor air quality, these tips can help you create a healthier, more earth-friendly indoor environment.

Use a water filter. Depending on where you live, different contaminants could reside in your tap water. Rather than risk consuming these contaminants or drinking bottled water, which can generate significant waste, consider purchasing a refrigerator with a filtered water option, attaching a water filtration device to your faucet or using a filtered water pitcher.

Ditch plastic food containers. Some plastics are not as high quality as many think and may contain toxic materials, making them potentially harmful – especially when used for storing food. Instead, opt for glass, silicone, cloth or stainless steel storage containers, which are friendlier to the environment and pose fewer toxicity risks. Plus, many of these containers can be placed directly in an oven or microwave to safely reheat food.

Install eco-friendly insulation. Certain materials in your home, such as insulation, can be replaced with sustainable options that also improve indoor air quality. Consider replacing your existing attic insulation with sheep's wool insulation, such as all-natural options from Havelock Wool. This renewable, high-performing and safe-to-handle material excels at managing moisture while improving indoor air quality through the absorption of formaldehyde, nitrogen oxide and other harmful substances. Learn more at havelockwool.com.

Clean "green." Cleaning products can be made with ingredients that are harmful to the environment, as well as your family's health. Make sure you know what is in your household cleaners before using them and, whenever possible, look for cleaners that have been certified as green.

Deal with dust. Even if you don't struggle with allergies or asthma, over time, dust particles can be unhealthy for you and your family. Vacuum frequently and use a wet mop on floors without carpet to limit the formation of dust bunnies throughout your home. Clean and replace your vacuum's filter frequently to ensure you're trapping maximum dust. Also regularly wash towels, linens and other textiles, including window treatments.

Replace air filters. Older, dirty air filters can circulate dust, pollen and other particles throughout your home. They can also cause your air conditioner and heater to run less efficiently, which can result in higher energy consumption. Rather than pushing potentially harmful dust particles into your house and causing your systems to work overtime, inspect your air filter often and change it regularly. You might also want to consider installing a whole-home air purifier or placing portable air purifiers in frequently used rooms.

Reduce energy and natural resource usage. Try installing timers on your lights so they turn on only at specified times. To take it a step further, consider installing lighting with vacancy sensors that automatically shut off the lights when a room isn't being used. Choose energy-efficient appliances, low-flow toilets and consider adding a rain barrel outside to collect rainwater, which can be used for chores such as watering plants, irrigating the lawn or washing your car.

Although it may not be practical to implement all of these ideas at once, little by little you can make small changes that add up to a big difference.

PAHS Recognized by Character.org

Pen Argyl High School was recognized by Character.org as a Promising Practice high school for their Senior Citizens Day.

Promising Practices are unique, effective and replicable character initiatives that validate good character firsthand and directly align with Character.org's 11 Principles of Character Education.

They were recognized for meeting the standard of Principles 4 and 5. Principle 4: The school creates a caring community: In a caring school community, the daily life of classrooms and all other parts of the school environment are imbued with a climate of concern and respect for others.

Principle 5: The school provides students with opportunities for moral action: Students need many and varied opportunities to grapple with real-life challenges. Through repeated experiences and reflection, students develop appreciation for and commitment to acting on their ethical and performance values.

A committee of students and teachers spent the 16/17 school year developing the Code of the Green Knights. This Code is the foundation of our Character Education Program grounded in the principles of universality (Would you want all persons to act this way in a similar situation) and reversibility (Would you want to be treated this way). The four core ethical values decided upon by the committee are:

Protect Integrity, Accept Challenges, Honor Diversity, Salute Kindness.

In schools of character, adults embrace their critical role as models. Teachers work together as professionals- and with parents and community members as partners-to positively shape the social, emotional, and character development of the young people entrusted to them each day. Students in these schools feel safe, respected, and connected to those around them, allowing them to thrive academically and socially and be motivated to give back to their communities. Our mission is to instill these character traits into the culture and climate of our school so everyone can be more self-aware, resilient, and respectful of themselves and others.

Bangor Band

On Friday, September 8th, the Bangor Area High School Marching Band debuted their new uniforms at the Varsity Football Game vs Northern Lehigh. Barry Transue, a long-time volunteer with the Bangor Slater Band, was involved with the concept of using the Welsh Guard theme for the band uniforms. He relates the following story about how this happened. In the summer of 1973, bands from the UK gave a performance at Muhlenberg College. A group of students and adults went on a bus to see the performance. The Bangor director was John Farley and the flags director, then known as the Boleros, was Earl Rader. Rader took a Welsh flag from the band room along to the performance. The first band to perform was the Scottish Guard. After an intermission, the Welsh Guard Band entered. They saw the Welsh flag that Rader waved. The leader approached the Bangor group and saluted them. Transue, Rader, and Farley had been discussing what to do about uniforms. Transue said that they then decided to model Bangor's uniforms after the Welsh Guard. In the summer of 1975, Bangor had a large centennial celebration and the band wanted to have their new look for that parade. The Boosters raised $8,000 of the $16,000 cost for the uniforms. However, the uniforms did not arrive in time for the celebration. The first time the Welsh Guard style uniforms were worn was in October of 1975 at an away Wilson football game. Few in the crowd knew the idea behind the uniforms, so Transue went to the loud speaker and described the purpose of the Welsh theme. It was then that Transue became the announcer for the Bangor Band and continued as a volunteer announcer until 2007 after traveling to Wales with the Slater Marching Band.

In the spring of 2017, new uniforms were ordered, continuing with the Welsh theme, and were worn for the first time on September 8, 2017. The Bangor Slater Band Boosters, with the support from our community, alumni, current members, and businesses raised $68,000 towards the purchase price of $117,000. The Board of Education contributed the additional towards the total cost. The old uniforms were retired after serving the band for 42 years.

The Slater Band Boosters would like to thank all the donors, school administration, the Board of Education, and the community for all their support.
